Southern and Atlantic Coast Line officials and counsel in conference with Governor Glenn at Raleigh yesterday agreed upon a settlement of the railway rate fight, the railroads agreeing to put the new rate into effect August 8th, pending settlement of the cases now before the courts; it is regarded as a very great victory for the State; in Asheville yesterday the police justice following up the instructions of Governor Glenn to go "higher up," indicted President Finley, of the Southern, and hauled him into court; he was later, however, turned loose on habeas corpus proceedings before Judge Pritchard, after the official had been put to much inconvenience; Ticket Agent Wood also was re-arrested and taken from the ticket window while hundreds of passengers had to board trains without tickets. —Severe wind and hail storms visited sections of Eastern North Carolina Friday night. —United States Senator Edmund W. Pettus, of Alabama, was stricken with apoplexy at Hot Springs, N. C., Friday morning and died last night at 10 o'clock, following his colleague in the Senate to the grave. —One man was killed and five others were injured in a head-on collision last night between the Atlantic Coast Line Florida Special and the second section of a northbound train; Engineer Bradshaw, of the fast train, accepts the responsibility of the wreck, saying he forgot his orders. —Another wreck occurred on the Southern last night in which there was loss of life and many injured. —The steamboat Frontenac was burned on Cayuga Lake, near Auburn, N. Y., yesterday afternoon, with the result that nine of the 50 passengers were drowned and several others were injured. —The jury has the case of Haywood at Boise, Idaho, and a verdict is expected at any time. —New York markets: Money on call, nominal, time loans firm; 60 days, 4 1/2 and 90 days 5 per cent, close, prime mercantile paper, 5 1/2 to 6 1/2; spot cotton quiet, middling uplands 12.90; flour steady but quiet; wheat spot firm No. 2 red 96 3/8, closed one-half cent higher; oats spot steady, mixed 40 1/2; turpentine steady at 58 1/2; rosin steady, strained common to good $4.50 to $4.65.

"The price of spool cotton is still soaring," says the Columbia State. That's sew.

If the decision of Judge Pritchard was really a "severe shock" to President Roosevelt, as reported, it must be rank.

If the railroads have to pay $4,500 for every ticket they sell how can they make any money, even at 3 1/4 cents a mile?

The Eastern Carolina News has entered its third year. It is one of the brightest, newsmen of the State Weeklies, and is a credit to Duplin county.

As if to add fuel to the flame the News and Observer is injecting a crimson hue into its headlines. "There's blood on the moon," for a fact.

It is devoutly to be wished that the railroad question may be settled without an extraordinary session of the Legislature. The regular session of this body was "extraordinary" in some respects.

The rate law is now getting into politics, or vice versa. The Republicans are now alarmed lest the contention between the State and Federal courts make States' rights a prominent issue in the next campaign. This has cast a shadow over Oyster Bay.

Referring to the great South and Western railroad, mentioned editorially in the Star yesterday, the Charlotte Observer says: "This whole section, Charlotte especially, may expect marked benefit. If Wilmington's 30-foot channel were only assured our satisfaction would be complete." The Star bids its contemporary be of good cheer. That 30-foot channel will arrive on time. The whole State is interested in it, and we have no doubt the Navy Department will endorse the project.

The Seaboard Air Line has ordered the withdrawal of one of its trains running between Charlotte and Ruthersford, and it is reported that the train leaving Wilmington at 4 A. M. will be taken off "later on," which probably means at the close of the season for summer travel. We hope there is no foundation for this report. But should the Seaboard order a discontinuance of the morning train the management will have a night of very large proportions on its hands. Neither the people of Wilmington nor those on the line of the Carolina Central are willing to go back to the antiquated schedule. There is no good reason why the Carolina Central should be made a tramway for freight traffic with little or no regard for the accommodation of the travelling public.

BOYS' BRIGADE BACK

Thirteenth Annual Encampment Ended at Camp Brunswick, Southport, Yesterday.

HAD DELIGHTFUL OUTING

Boys Return in High Spirits and Fine Condition—General Orders Covering Final Movement of Soldiers—Thanks Returned.

Their bright khaki somewhat begrimed with the dust from camp, with tanned countenances but light hearts, the members of the First Battalion, Boys' Brigade of America, reached the city yesterday evening on the steamer Wilmington from Camp Brunswick, at Southport, where the command has been on its annual outing for the past ten days. The encampment was a very great success, this having been the thirteenth annual event of its kind. Col. Walker Taylor, in command, members of the Brigade and the visitors for the week all express delight with the manner in which the boys acquitted themselves and are confident that employers who granted their employees this brief indulgence will be more than repaid for their absence. The final orders breaking camp were as follows and were carried out to the letter: Camp Brunswick, Southport, N. C., Saturday, July 27th, 1907: Special Order No. 3.

This camp will formally break this afternoon at 4:30. We will proceed to board the steamer Wilmington for our homes. Each man will arrange his baggage and put it in the Company street in front of his tent by 2 P. M. Sergeant Price will proceed with the detail at that hour to take down the tents and fold and pack them.

In closing our thirteenth annual encampment, which has been the most successful of them all, the Commanding Officer takes this opportunity of expressing his personal appreciation and gratification to each member of the company for their uniform and continued courtesy and willing obedience of all rules and regulations, and feels justified in entertaining the hope that they will return to their employers greatly benefited by this outing and prepared to show their appreciation to their employers for their generous consideration in allowing them the opportunity of enjoying the benefits of this encampment by renewed and ever increasing interest in their work.

We desire to thank our always friend, Captain John W. Harper, for the free transportation, thereby lifting the burden of the expense item. We also desire to thank our friend Mr. Junius Davis for his timely remembrance; and the good people of Southport for their uniform kindness to us all. We make our acknowledgments to Mr. James D. Nutt for his assistance and addition to our pleasure. By order of

COL. TAYLOR,
Commander.

Fayetteville Team Coming.

Fayetteville will be well represented at the tournament of the Firemen of the State here next month. The Fayetteville Observer of yesterday afternoon says: "The racing team of the Fayetteville Fire Company is making good headway for the races at Wilmington, August 6-9. The boys are going to bring back the great prize this year."

MRS. T. S. BURBANK DEAD

Summons Came Quite Suddenly and Unexpectedly Yesterday Evening at Her Home in This City. Funeral Monday Morning.

The community was shocked and saddened late yesterday evening at the announcement of the sudden death of Mrs. Mary Lippitt Burbank, wife of Dr. Thos. S. Burbank and a woman held in the very highest esteem by all in the circle of her acquaintance. The death of Mrs. Burbank came quite suddenly and unexpectedly at 6:10 o'clock at her home on South 5th street. She was able to be out Friday but yesterday she was quite unwell and had been indoors for the day. With her when the end came was her relative, Miss Elsie Munds, a trained nurse, although the condition of Mrs. Burbank was not regarded as of such serious nature as to require professional attendance. Miss Munds being present merely on a social visit. The patient complained of being faint and her relative had just stepped away for a moment either for medicine or water when Mrs. Burbank made some exclamation and fell back from a reclining position and had passed away before help could reach her. Dr. Burbank was at Wrightsville Beach making some professional calls as resident surgeon at the hotels and a daughter had accompanied a guest down town when the news of their great bereavement was broken to them by friends. All join in tendering to the sorrowing ones tenderest sympathy in this the hour of their deep grief.

Mrs. Burbank was in the 49th year of her age at the time of her death. She was a daughter of the late Joseph J. Lippitt, of Wilmington, who died in the yellow fever epidemic of 1862 in this city, her mother being Mrs. Jane Dickinson Green Lippitt, a daughter of the late Jno. S. Green, for a long time treasurer of the old Wilmington & Weldon railroad. The family is prominent in the Cape Fear county and a host of friends and relatives, other than the immediate family, will learn with sorrow the distressing news of Mrs. Burbank's death. There are of the immediate family surviving, the husband, Dr. Thos. S. Burbank, a leading Wilmington physician; one sister, Mrs. Walter R. Tallaferrro, of Charlotte, and three daughters, Misses Daley, Dell and Rosalie Burbank, of this city. Many friends called at the saddened home last night to offer their sympathy and be of any assistance possible in the great affliction which has stricken the family.

Mrs. Burbank was a devoted communicant of St. James and the funeral will be conducted from that church Monday morning at 10:30 o'clock.

DEDICATION TODAY.

Impressive Ceremony by Christian Scientists Today—Lecture.

Yesterday the furniture in the handsome rooms of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in the Odd Fellows' building, was removed to the pretty new house of worship of the congregation in Carolina Place at Seventeenth and Market streets and the new edifice will be dedicated with impressive ceremony this morning at 11 o'clock and 6 o'clock this evening. To these services the public is most cordially invited and the attendance promises to be quite large. The church is an exceedingly handsome one, and at night is brilliantly lighted. Appropriate decorations have been placed for the dedication today and the exercises promise to be pretty and effective. The Consolidated Company will operate special cars on account of the dedication this morning and the evening service on the cars will be all that can be desired.

Mrs. Livingston Mims, C. S. D., of Atlanta, an ardent admirer and deep student of Mrs. Eddy, the wife of the Gate City's former distinguished Mayor, Livingston Mims, arrived in the city yesterday evening and will take part in the dedication today. On Monday night Mrs. Mims will deliver a lecture on Christian Science in the new church and to this event the public is also most cordially invited.

WANT TO SETTLE THE CASE.

Case of Young Julius Brasington Arrested Here Few Days Ago.

Young Julius Brasington, the white man arrested here a few days ago on a charge of the larceny of a dress suit case from Capt. T. G. Mathis, conductor on the Fayetteville accommodation train upon which he was a passenger to this city, is communicating with a brother, John Brasington, in Chattanooga, Tenn., and with another brother in Jacksonville, Fla., with a view of settling his troubles here. The case was set for trial yesterday, but in view of the negotiations that are being made the defendant was granted a continuance until Tuesday of this week. His brother from Chattanooga is expected at that time. Young Brasington is scarcely 21 years of age, is evidently from a good family, and has no indication of being a criminal. He has been travelling around to "see something of the world," and fell into the trouble here without an idea of committing a violation. He had simply lost his own dress suit case and picked up another. The charitable view of the case is that he took it by mistake.

Yesterday's games in the City Baseball League at Hilton Park drew the largest attendance of the season and two fine exhibitions of the National sport were witnessed. The Giants succeeded in turning the trick of administering the first defeat of the season to the strong Y. M. C. A. team, which had enjoyed an unbroken record of victories from the start and the Rattlers defeated the Monarchs to the tune of 10 to 3. Both were pretty games in spite of rather bad showing in the error column. The battery work of Gore, C., and Seifert for the militant Giants was superb. Gore has been laid up a couple of weeks with a bad arm, but he pitched winning ball yesterday afternoon and had almost unbroken support in the field. Wilkinson and Andrews were especially good in this respect. Behind the willow Seifert was steady and did some spectacular stunts on the foul line. The Giants won out by bunching hits and taking advantage of the errors and one or two wild throws of their opponents in the first and second innings.

The Score

Giants 450 000 000—9 7 5
Y. M. C. A. 011 000 000—2 6 2
Batteries: Gore, C. and Seifert; Duls and King, L.
Summary—Struck out by Gore, 7; Duls, 4. Time 1:30. Umpire, Mr. Moore.

The game between the Rattlers and Monarchs was not slow and the tail-enders of the League took a tumble to themselves in good fashion. The Score

Rattlers 240 102 100—10 8 2
Monarchs 010 100 000—3 3 10

Southside Baseball League. Another city baseball league that gives promise of some good games during the remainder of the season was organized during the past week by Mr. Alonzo Burriss in the southern part of the city. It will be known as the Southside League of Wilmington, and the grounds at Third and Castle streets have been secured for the games. The proceeds will be devoted to the maintenance of the Rescue Home recently established Church street. The teams are composed of strong players and are designated as follows: Wilmington, Capt. Fritz Zellers; Gray Eagles, Capt. John Zellers; Wilmington Confidence team, Capt. Nick Justice, and the Union Leaders, Capt. Robert Sellers. By next Saturday it is hoped to have seats arranged for the ladies. The general admission will be five cents, with ten cents extra for reserved seats. The first games were played yesterday afternoon, and the Wilmington team defeated the Union League in a score of 5 to 3, while the Eagles were defeated by the Confidence team in a score of 8 to 5. The Confidence team is largely made up of employees in the Wilmington Cotton Mills.

MR. ROUNTREE'S ADDRESS.

Merited Praise From High Source in State of Ohio.

Apologies of the address recently delivered by Mr. George Rountree, of this city, before the Bar Association, a private letter received by a gentleman of this city from a friend in Ohio, himself a very able lawyer, says: "Yours inclosing copy of News & Observer containing address of George Rountree, Esq., at the North Carolina Bar Association, received in this mail. I thank you for same and wish this country was fuller of Rountrees. I should like to vote for a man like that for judge. He hit the nail square on the head and I feel certain he would not have to stay in North Carolina to verify the truths of the courageous statements made in his address. I often feel like saying, Oh Lord, how long, but I am afraid it will be near the millennium when we reach the ideals contained in this splendid address, and wished for in vain by so many."

The value of the compliment to Mr. Rountree in this letter is the more appreciable because coming from a stranger and without expectation of its being seen by Mr. Rountree.

A FIEND AT LAURINBURG

Attempted Criminal Assault on Wife of Station Agent Friday Night. Reward Offered For Negro Pursued to South Carolina Line.

(Special Star Telegram.)

Laurinburg, N. C., July 27.—The negro or mulatto who burglarized the home of A. W. Ellison and attempted to assault Mrs. Ellison last night at this place, has been traced to the South Carolina line. One hundred dollars reward is offered. He is known having walked on our streets a few days, all is intense but quiet. He will not be brought back here if caught on account of danger of lynching.

There was much excitement last night at Laurinburg when it became known that an attempted assault had been made about 9 o'clock on the wife of Depot Agent A. W. Ellison, by an unknown negro in her home, while her husband was attending to his duties at the station.

Mrs. Ellison had been on the porch and hearing a noise in her room went in there, thinking that it was made by the baby. A lamp was burning in the room but in spite of this fact a negro, who had concealed himself in the closet some hours earlier, it is supposed, grabbed the woman by the shoulders and attempted to assault her. A pistol lying nearby was snatched up by Mrs. Ellison and an effort made to shoot the brute but she was too much excited and fled from the room, after getting loose from the negro, and rushed out into the yard where she fell almost unconscious. The negro fled through a back window and made good his escape.

An exciting crowd soon gathered at the home and Mrs. Ellison, gave a good description of her assailant. She saw him in the light and says that she will easily recognize him at sight. A posse was immediately formed and went in pursuit of the fiend.

Several negroes were arrested and carried to Mrs. Ellison for identification, but she says that the right one has not yet been captured.

THE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Sessions at Whiteville Most Pleasant and Profitable—Next Meeting.

Wilmington delegates and pastors who attended the Wilmington District Conference at Whiteville during the past week yesterday said that the meeting was unusually successful and well attended; in fact, one of the pastors said he did not remember a more pleasant or a more profitable gathering of the kind. The Whiteville people were simply royal in their entertainment of the guests, and nothing could have been asked that was not their's.

The next annual district conference will be at Tabernacle Methodist Church, Onslow county, of which Rev. D. C. Geddie is now pastor. Delegates to the General Conference were elected as follows: W. H. Hickman, of Sampson county; H. F. Schuiken, of Whiteville; John T. Sholar, of Wilmington; and Cicero Johnson, of Pender county; alternates, J. T. Kerr, of New Hanover, and Dr. N. M. Culbreth, of Wilmington. A feature of the closing session of the conference was an address by Mr. H. M. North, headmaster of Trinity Park High School, at Durham. Mr. North presented the great work being done by his excellent institution at Trinity and was heard with much interest by the conference. As stated in yesterday's paper, Rev. Mr. Wooten, of the chair of Biblical literature in Trinity College, also addressed the conference.

RAN UP WHITE FLAG

Truce is Reached Between Railroads and the State of North Carolina.

TO PUT RATE INTO EFFECT

August 8th is Named as Date—Conference With Governor and Southern Officials in Asheville Yesterday—After "Higher Ups."

(By Associated Press.)

Raleigh, N. C., July 27.—The Southern Railway and the Atlantic Coast Line, through their general counsel, and the stockholders of the Atlantic Coast Line, who had enjoined that road from putting into effect the State 2 1/4-cent rate through their counsel, agreed with State counsel and with Governor Glenn this morning to put the rate into effect on the eighth of August, this being the earliest possible time the roads could prepare the tariffs and make the changes. The other agreements are to proceed in an orderly way in the courts, and to end pending cases and indictments, the agreement being practically that offered by Governor Glenn in his telegram to Solicitor Mark Brown, at Asheville.

The agreement entered into by the Southern, the Atlantic Coast Line and the State is:

1. The railroads put the 2 1/4-cent rate into effect not later than August 8th, 1907.
2. The State to appeal from the order of Judge Pritchard, discharging parties in Asheville on writs of habeas corpus.
3. The Southern Railway to appeal to the Supreme Court of North Carolina in the Wake county cases, and if the case is there decided against it, to take the case by writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States.
4. That both sides co-operate to have both of said cases advanced and argued together and speedily determined.

5. That the State, at its option, may indict the Atlantic Coast Line in one case.

6. All indictments and prosecutions now pending to be dismissed and no other indictments or prosecutions to be instituted for any alleged violations of the law up to the time the new 2 1/4-cent rate is put into effect under this arrangement as far as the Governor can control the same.

7. The Governor to advise all people against bringing any penalty suits pending final determination of the question involved, and ask the people as a whole to acquiesce in this arrangement.

8. The suit pending before Judge Pritchard to be diligently prosecuted without the State, however, waiving any question of jurisdiction. (Signed)

ALFRED P. THOM,
ALEXANDER P. HUMPHREY,
Counsel for Southern Railway Company.
R. B. GLENN,
Governor.

Messrs. Thom and Humphrey also as counsel for the Southern Railway Company, to undertake that the Southern Railway will not inaugurate rate contempt proceedings because of anything heretofore done by any of the State officers in connection with the rate litigation and will do what it can to prevent the inauguration of any such contempt proceedings.

This arrangement between the Southern Railway and R. B. Glenn, Governor, is also assented to by George Rountree, attorney for Nelson Buckley and others, complainants, and Alexander Hamilton, general counsel for the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company, except that they do not consent that the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad shall be indicted in one case, but as long as that leaving the State at liberty to do as its sense of duty may dictate.

Governor Glenn tonight gave the following statement to the press regarding the outcome of the State's fight for the 2 1/4-cent rate law:

"The Governor considers the victory in the matter of the State against the railroads as one for State's rights and the people's. There were many things that added to the victory.

"First, The righteousness of the cause, and the determination of the people, through their efforts, no longer to submit to the oppression of the railroads or the interference of the Federal Courts."

The Governor feels that it is a great step forward for State's rights, and that if all the other States of the Union will continue the fight already begun in North Carolina, and insist upon their Senators and Representatives in Congress trying to curtail the growing power of the Federal courts, in the future there will be no trouble to control and direct railroads and other corporations.

Statement of the Compromise. Raleigh, N. C., July 27.—The State of North Carolina has won in its fight to have its passenger rate law of 2 1/4 cents observed by all the railroads pending an appeal to the courts by the roads of the State which propose to fight the law.

The promise of obedience to the law by the Southern and the Atlantic Coast Line railroads, which since July first, the date set for the rate law of St. James Episcopal Church, and Rev. Dr. Wells, of the First Presbyterian Church, of Wilmington. The chapel was built by contribution from members of the two congregations.

The fact that there are no mosquitoes or flies on Wrightsville Beach seems to strike visitors as something unusual. There is also not a wire screen or door on the beach. The reason is that the stiff breezes which generally prevail drive mosquitoes and flies away, and is one of many reasons which makes Wrightsville Beach the "Ideal Summer Resort."

Mr. Edgar Hinton, of the Seashore Hotel, who is always trying to add some new form of pleasure and delight for his little guests, has purchased six little Mexican burros and the children of the hotel ride them at will, up and down the long stretch of beach. Under head of "Augusta's Future Belles and Beaux" there is printed in the society column of the Augusta, Ga. Herald, a pretty likeness of Luther B. Herring, Jr., the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Luther B. Herring, formerly of this city. The child bears a marked resemblance to his father, looks healthy, happy and wealthy. Friends of Mr. and Mrs. Herring will be glad to know that they are well pleased with their home in Augusta where Mr. Herring has a leading position with one of the telegraph companies.

The up-to-date-ness of Wrightsville Beach is manifest in its system of water works, sewerage and electric lights, and the seventeen comfortable cottages recently erected for rent, which are supplied with bath room adjoining bedrooms, porcelain tubs, running water, sewerage, electric lights and neat furniture. The purest drinking water in the State is furnished by two deep artesian wells one on the Hammocks, and the other on the Beach. Both these wells are bored through land entirely surrounded by salt water and the analysis proves the water from them to be absolutely pure and wholesome.

The steamer Wilmington carried during the past week the greatest number of passengers of the season, many of Wilmington's best citizens being included in the number. Capt. Harper stands at the gangway when passengers are going on board and no one is allowed to go on who is the least bit objectionable. Each trip of the steamer carried happy, light hearted ladies and gentlemen on pleasure bent and Carolina Beach with its improved conditions, is growing in popularity. The moonlight trips were unusually pleasant and the mid-week dance was a very pleasant and successful one.

Two popular young Wilmingtonians, Miss Clyde Larkins and Mr. Henry Johnson, were the principals in a surprise wedding which was announced in this city during the past week. On account of their ages there was parental objections but it was the old story of love and locksmiths and so they hid themselves to Florence, S. C., where they were met by Rev. T. E. Morris, pastor of the Methodist Church at Bennettsville, a friend of the groom, and the two were made man and wife in a very impressive ceremony. The bride and groom returned to Wilmington and are making themselves at home at the residence of Mrs.

Burkheimer, on Third, between Grace and Walnut streets. The groom came to Wilmington from Bennettsville, S. C. some months ago and has a position with the Darley Park Brewing Company as bookkeeper. The bride has relatives in Bennettsville, S. C., and it was while on a visit there that the two met. When the groom came to Wilmington the acquaintance formed in Bennettsville ripened into love, courtship and then the marriage. The bride is a most attractive young woman and has made her home in Wilmington for some time with her sisters, Misses eLta and Duralde Larkins.

At the recent meeting of Cape Fear Chapter, Daughters of the Confederacy, very pretty and fitting resolutions of respect to the memory of the late Mrs. Elizabeth Hedrick were unanimously passed by a rising vote upon report of the committee appointed to draft a suitable memorial to this good woman and ardent worker in the cause of the Confederacy. The resolutions were as follows:

"Into the shadows of life's twilight, and from thence to the brighter land beyond, where the sun of righteousness ever sheds his beams and no shadows fall, on May 1st, passed the pure spirit of Mrs. Elizabeth Hedrick, one of the brave soldiers of the Confederate army. Faithful unto death to his memory and the cause he so warmly espoused, nothing will overpowered her feeble health, ever overpowered her from her duty. Each memorial day found her at her post, no finger moved more briskly in preparing the laurels for the fallen heroes. Though leading an ever-active life, other duties succumbed on that day when she turned aside from her busy life to do honors to the memory of the noble army in which her gallant husband bore his part.

"In the days of the existence of the Oakdale Memorial Association she held the office of vice president at one time and afterwards of president, in which capacity she was serving at the time the association was merged into that of the Daughters of the Confederacy. There she continued her memorial work, in all faithfulness, until the end came this year and she was no longer able to be at her post, where her familiar form and face were sadly missed by the circle who loved and appreciated her. Quietly as her life had passed, ere the laurels had faded upon the mounds for which she loved to care, she fell 'asleep in Jesus,' and was borne to the 'other side,' where with many others gone before she awaits those in our midst who are rapidly nearing their end, when they, too, must lay down their beloved work.

"In the death of Mrs. Hedrick the Daughters of the Confederacy resolve that they have lost a true and faithful member, which adds not only another vacant chair, but another broken link to the sacred past in the early days of our determined efforts to preserve the sacred memory of our dead heroes for coming generations.

"Also, Resolved, That a page in our minutes be dedicated to her ever-living memory and this tribute and these resolutions be published in the daily papers of this city, and a copy sent to the bereaved ones, with loving sympathy and appreciation of her worth, from the association whose work was so dear to her heart.

COMING FROM UNION.

South Carolina Companies to Attend Tournament in This City.

Union, S. C., July 26.—Union's fire company, which made such an excellent record at Anderson last week, will probably enter the Inter-State tournament to be held at Wilmington, N. C., August 6th, 7th and 8th.

At least this matter is being very seriously considered and quite a number of Unionites are proffering financial assistance so that the home team can go over where it is believed it could win in some of the contests.

This tournament will be a much bigger event than that at Anderson last week for teams from four or five States will be present, and among them it is understood will be the Anderson team, which carried off several prizes last week.

As an inducement for the teams to go, railroads have offered to transport horses and equipment free of charge, and offer firemen the special rate of one cent a mile plus 25 cents.

One of the big events of the tournament will be the parade Wednesday morning, the State races Wednesday afternoon, the latter contest being the one the Union boys are especially interested in.

A WOMAN TO BE PRETTY

Must Have Luxuriant and Glossy Hair, No Matter What Color.

The finest contour of a female mouth, leaves something if the head is crowned with scant hair. Scant and falling hair, it is now known, is caused by a parasite that burrows into the scalp to the root of the hair, where it saps the vitality. The little white scales the germ throws up in burrowing are called dandruff. To cure dandruff permanently, then, and to stop falling hair, that germ must be killed. Newbro's Herpicide, an entirely new result of the chemical laboratory, destroys the dandruff germ, and, of course, stops the falling hair, and prevents baldness. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c. in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich.

Paul Oblonsky's Ruse.

(Original.)

Paul Oblonsky, a Russian comedian, having become interested with his countrymen in the cause of political liberty, left the stage and became a writer in behalf of the czar.

While Oblonsky was publishing his pamphlets, which were all eminently satisfactory to the government, he was engaged in disseminating literature of an entirely different kind. He made journeys from his home to different points to organize, advise and encourage different secret societies that represented the most radical element of the revolution. Of course the day came when he was reported to the police as a suspect, but so wary had been that the chief would not believe he was a revolutionist.

One day a telegram came to the police at St. Petersburg that a meeting of revolutionists had been broken up at Moscow and a man resembling Paul Oblonsky had got away. The chief sent at once to Oblonsky's house to discover if he was at home. The man who went on the errand knew Oblonsky by sight and as he approached the house saw him sitting at an upper window. He returned and reported the fact to his superior.

Not long after this a spy of the government in Warsaw reported that Oblonsky was one of a band of conspirators, of which he (the spy) was also a member. Still doubting the truth of information implicating a man who had defended the government, the chief sent the same messenger he had used before to Oblonsky's house. On the way the messenger met Oblonsky in a carriage driving with his sister.

The chief was puzzled. Those who use spies are never certain but that they are spies of the enemy. However, he telegraphed orders that if at any time Oblonsky was seen in Warsaw the occurrence be at once reported. In a few days a telegram came announcing that Oblonsky had been seen entering that city from the suburbs in a drosky. The informant was not in the pay of the government; therefore Oblonsky was not followed. The chief sent one of his best men at once to Oblonsky's house, directing him to make sure whether or no Oblonsky was there. He was to go in and speak with him. Oblonsky had been seen entering Warsaw an hour before the receipt of the telegram. He surely would not have had time to return before the official could get to his house. As the messenger approached he looked up at the window where Oblonsky was accustomed to read or write, but he was not there. Entering the house, he found Oblonsky's old mother.

"I have called," he said, "to get a copy of your son's last political pamphlet for the chief of police. It is reported that there are in it some features objectionable to the government." "Indeed," said the old lady, "I will call my son, who will hand you one himself." Thereupon she went upstairs, and who should come down but Oblonsky himself, with the pamphlet in his hand. The official wished him good day, took the pamphlet and returned to the chief. Immediately an order was sent to Warsaw to send the person who had seen Oblonsky entering the city to St. Petersburg. A man arrived the next day who declared that he knew Oblonsky well, and he had certainly seen him as he had reported. The chief sent for Oblonsky ostensibly to discuss the objectionable passage in his pamphlet, but really to subject him to the view of the informant from Moscow. The informant at once declared that Oblonsky was the man he had seen in the drosky entering Warsaw.

The chief was now satisfied that there had been a mistake. He gave orders for the secret police to watch those who had reported against Oblonsky, thinking that they might be revolutionists endeavoring to get rid of a friend of the government.

One morning an official occupying a high position in the government was found murdered in his office. Among those reported to have left the office shortly before the finding of the body was Oblonsky. For the first time the chief began to believe that Oblonsky was a revolutionist, and if so he must be one of the most adroit as well as most dangerous of the lot. The chief did not order Oblonsky's arrest, but surrounded his house with spies. They reported that every morning and afternoon Oblonsky sat at his window writing. But when they reported that with the most careful watching they could not detect the slightest movement the chief sent an official to arrest him.

The official found the suspected man's mother and sister, who declared that Oblonsky was in his room writing an important article in defense of the government and had given orders that he was not to be interrupted. The official brushed past them and went upstairs to the room. There sat Oblonsky, but not a whit startled at the interruption, for he did not even look up. He was a dummy, the exact image of Oblonsky. Oblonsky had left St. Petersburg the morning of the assassination and was now being smuggled across the frontier.

The moment the official saw the dummy he remembered having seen Oblonsky on the mimic stage in a play wherein it was necessary to make him appear there while absent changing his costume. For this purpose a lay figure had been constructed so nearly like the actor that the closest scrutiny from the audience could not detect the fraud. The figure had represented the revolutionist at his window except on the occasion of his having been seen driving both in St. Petersburg and Warsaw. His sister had taken it to Warsaw for the purpose of misleading the police.

Not long after this a spy of the government in Warsaw reported that Oblonsky was one of a band of conspirators, of which he (the spy) was also a member. Still doubting the truth of information implicating a man who had defended the government, the chief sent the same messenger he had used before to Oblonsky's house. On the way the messenger met Oblonsky in a carriage driving with his sister.

The chief was puzzled. Those who use spies are never certain but that they are spies of the enemy. However, he telegraphed orders that if at any time Oblonsky was seen in Warsaw the occurrence be at once reported. In a few days a telegram came announcing that Oblonsky had been seen entering that city from the suburbs in a drosky. The informant was not in the pay of the government; therefore Oblonsky was not followed. The chief sent one of his best men at once to Oblonsky's house, directing him to make sure whether or no Oblonsky was there. He was to go in and speak with him. Oblonsky had been seen entering Warsaw an hour before the receipt of the telegram. He surely would not have had time to return before the official could get to his house. As the messenger approached he looked up at the window where Oblonsky was accustomed to read or write, but he was not there. Entering the house, he found Oblonsky's old mother.

"I have called," he said, "to get a copy of your son's last political pamphlet for the chief of police. It is reported that there are in it some features objectionable to the government." "Indeed," said the old lady, "I will call my son, who will hand you one himself." Thereupon she went upstairs, and who should come down but Oblonsky himself, with the pamphlet in his hand. The official wished him good day, took the pamphlet and returned to the chief. Immediately an order was sent to Warsaw to send the person who had seen Oblonsky entering the city to St. Petersburg. A man arrived the next day who declared that he knew Oblonsky well, and he had certainly seen him as he had reported. The chief sent for Oblonsky ostensibly to discuss the objectionable passage in his pamphlet, but really to subject him to the view of the informant from Moscow. The informant at once declared that Oblonsky was the man he had seen in the drosky entering Warsaw.

A Pantomime.

(Original.)

I sat by my office window looking into the offices directly opposite on the other side of the court. They consisted of several adjoining rooms. In one at a magnificent desk sat a gentleman with a bald head and brown whiskers constantly tapping a silver bell to call a boy. Next was an anteroom, next rooms full of clerks and bookkeepers. In the anteroom sat a girl at a typewriter, though she was constantly getting up to go into the baldheaded man's office to take dictation.

She was a willowy girl, with fair hair and large dreamy eyes. The door of the room in which she sat opened, and a young man came in. He was fashionably dressed, and I noticed plainly to his vest a college Greek letter society badge. He went up to the girl and said something to her. She looked up at him with a half blush on her face and a great deal of pleasure in her eyes. Then he went on into the room where the baldheaded man sat, and at once I noticed a likeness between them. They must be father and son. They chatted pleasantly for a time, when the young man rose to leave. When his hand was on the door-knob, the elder man called him back, wrote out a check and handed it to him. He put it in his pocketbook, went out, said something to the typewriter girl that caused her to laugh and was gone.

A few days later he came in again. This time he talked a good while with the typewriter girl. She went on with her work, listening to him at the same time. The faces of both were very serious. Presently he stole an arm about her waist, lifted up her face and kissed her. At that moment the baldheaded man got up from his desk and went to the door communicating with the anteroom. They were caught.

The father turned and went back into his private office. His son followed him and talked rapidly. I knew by the expression of his face that he was endeavoring to shield the girl. Whether he was talking about marriage with her I could not tell. I could not see the expression on the father's face, for he sat with his back to me. Presently the son went out. He found the typewriter girl with her face buried in her hands. He took them away, displaying two burning cheeks. He kissed her again, spoke a few words as if of encouragement and went away.

Every day the older man looked more troubled, and his son had lost all the vivacity I had first noticed.

The next day the typewriter did not appear at her desk. Another took her place. I saw the son no more and concluded he had returned to college. In a few months there was a sudden reduction of the office force, and all the rooms except the private office and anteroom were given up. Then the son appeared regularly and with an office boy was his father's only assistant. Words are not needed to indicate prosperity or adversity—they speak for themselves. I knew that the house of Blank & Co. had received a financial blow. The son was at the office early and late. Having to do some extra work myself at night, I saw him through the window working. He seemed to be his father's mainstay. The older man looked much broken and sadly needed a stay.

One morning—it was the next spring, and all windows were up again—the son was sitting at the typewriter doing some copying. The door opened and a lady came in. She was handsomely dressed, and her face had a familiar look. She advanced to the window where the young man sat, and I saw that she was the former typewriter.

Evidently there had been a bouleversment. The young man had left the realms of affluence. She had entered them. She talked with him earnestly. I wished I had a telephone connection with them to hear what they said, but I hadn't and must be content with pantomime. The girl appeared to be trying to persuade him. He laid his hand on her arm and, looking into her face, said something impressively. She was evidently disappointed. She arose and walked impatiently to and fro in the little room, then sat down by him and renewed the attack possibly in a new form. I fancied that the tables being turned, she was mingling with her persuasion a trifle of feminine loveliness, such as a wealthy woman might make to a poor man. Presently I saw him throw his arm about her neck and rain kisses on her cheeks and lips.

Meanwhile the old man in the next room was fussing with his papers, unconscious of what was going on so near him. Presently the young man arose, left the girl, entered his father's room and began to talk to him. The father's face was turned sideways, so that I could see his expression. From interest it passed to wonder and from wonder to pleasure, but before either of the first two expressions died a smile dawned on the father's lips.

Then the son went back and brought in the girl. The old man's looks were far different from when she and his son had been caught in the act of a kiss. He smiled on her benignly. The girl took out a pocketbook, drew forth a bit of paper, which she unfolded and handed to the father. It was the size of a check. Mr. Blank looked at it, hung his head for a moment, then tottered to the girl with outstretched arms. She threw her own about his neck. Presently he took one of her hands from off his shoulder and, grasping the son's hand, placed the two together.

I never received any explanation of this little drama. I needed none, especially when I saw all the clerks return and the business go on as usual.

F. A. MITCHELL.

There were music and dancing and feasting. In a recess sat a couple, as couples have sat from the beginning of the world, first under the primeval forest, then in a skin covered dwelling and now in splendid residences. The man was in the conventional black, the woman in a dream of a costume that had just been turned out at the hands of an artist.

"Your answer is final?" asked the man almost with a moan.

"Yes."

"But you have admitted that you could be very happy with me."

"The happier I could be the more miserable I would be."

"What do you mean?"

"In poverty I would suffer in seeing you suffer."

"But you might wait for something better than poverty. At the gold fields I shall!"

"A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush."

"Well?" anxiously.

"Within a few days I shall be engaged to a man whose fortune is not in the bowels of the earth."

It was with a sickening sensation about the heart that he went away from the place where he had been told that all he cared to strive for was denied him. He turned and looked back at the lights, and the music came to him in mockery. Should he go to the river and end it all or carry out his intention to go to the gold fields? The former course was but a momentary weakness; the latter would take him far away from the girl who was about to pass to another.

A man with a few streaks of gray in his hair and beard entered a ballroom. At the farther end a woman stood with her back to him. The moment his eye lighted on her costume he started. Fifteen years before the girl who had worn that dress or its counterpart had refused him and told him that she was about to marry a man whose fortune was a real tangible thing, not a dream of the future. The figure was the same, and the hair, like hers, was jet black. He advanced, and when still at a distance she turned. She was like his lost love, too much like her for the interval of years that had passed since he had seen her. He had expected to see her look older. But it was she. Of that he was quite sure.

She walked past him on the arm of an attendant, but gave no heed to the newcomer who was so much interested in her. He was not surprised that she did not recognize him. If she had not changed he had. He had been buried in a wilderness and had done nothing but dig in the earth.

"That," he said to a friend, pointing at the same time to the girl, "is or was Miss Howes?"

"Yes, Miss Howes."

"Please present me to her without speaking my name plainly, so that she will not hear it."

The introduction was made and "Donald King" so distorted as to sound like another name.

"Are you a resident of the city?" asked the girl by way of introducing conversation.

"I was at one time. I have been away a long time."

"I thought you must be a stranger, since I don't remember ever to have seen you before."

"You have known me well."

"It" She looked at him searchingly. "I must admit that you have passed out of my memory."

"That's natural. It's years since we parted. I might not have recognized you had it not been for something to guide me."

"And that is?"

The orchestra gave the call for a dance. A man came hurrying up to Miss Howes and led her away.

Donald King laid his plans to make more than a casual acquaintance of his former love and kept his identity so well concealed that he did not reveal himself. He was careful to chat with her only on subjects entirely disconnected with their past affair and learned little more about her life since then than she knew about his. He wished to know why she had not married, as she had intended, but feared to reveal himself by asking. He made rather quick love, but the lady seemed inclined to listen.

Finally he revealed himself in this wise:

"When I went away you said that you considered a bird in the hand worth two in the bush. Why did you not take the bird in the hand?"

"You speak in riddles."

"You are the woman I loved and the only woman I shall ever love. I might not have recognized you on my return had it not been that you wore the same dress as the night before my departure, when you told me there was no hope for me on account of my poverty. But on my return I recognized you, and you excited in me the same."

"Are you bereft of your senses, or have you mistaken me for some one else?" That dress was given my older sister years ago by my cousin, Edith Howes. My sister wore it occasionally, and now that its sleeves and other things in its make-up have come again into fashion I have been making use of it."

"And you are not Edith Howes?"

"No. I am Rebecca Howes."

Donald King married Rebecca Howes. One day while driving with his wife they met a woman fat and forty with prematurely white hair. Rebecca smiled at her.

"Who is she?" asked the husband.

"Edith Howes, the only woman you ever loved," replied his wife, with a laugh.

Fire This Morning.

The two-story frame building at 521 North Fifth street, owned by Mrs.
P. Blomme and occupied by her and Mr. J. W. Blomme and wife as living apartments upstairs and by G. M.
Murrell as a grocery store on the first floor, was badly damaged by fire this morning between 1 and 2 o'clock. The Department responded to a telephone alarm, the flames having been noticed by Mr. Joe Murrell, of the Western Union, who was passing. The fire originated in the store from an unknown cause probably rats and matches, and the stock of goods owned by Mr. Murrell was practically a total loss with $1,000 insurance with J. H. Boatwright & Son. The second floor occupied by Mrs. Blomme was badly damaged by smoke. The total loss is not yet estimated. The building is also insured with J. H. Boatwright & Son.

Beach with Mrs. Biggs, to hear the pilotage case in chambers in this city next Wednesday morning. The test case comes up from Justice Purlong's court and will be heard in chambers, so that it may be taken immediately up to the Supreme Court for final determination. The hearing will probably take place in the Court House, though this has not been decided. Ex-Governor Daniel Russell, Louis Goodman, Esq., and Preston Cumming, Jr.,

to go into effect, have been violating the law, was given this afternoon at a conference which the railroads sought with Governor Glenn, who had stated that as a precedent to any agreement he might make that the 2 1-4 cent rate must first be put into effect.

The conference was a private one, newspaper men being excluded at the request of the railroad attorneys. After the conference Governor Glenn stated that at the beginning of the conference the railroad representatives stated that they were ready to agree to the 2 1-4 cents, later to be tested in the original injunction case before Judge Pritchard, an appeal if necessary to be taken by the State to the United States Supreme Court, while the railroads would appeal the Wake county case to the North Carolina Supreme Court and if necessary, take the case on writ of error to the United States Supreme Court. The only trouble in the conference was a selection of the date at which the 2 1-4 cent rate should become effective. The railroads wanted a longer time than the State was willing to grant, but finally the 8th of August was agreed upon, as the railroads' representatives stated that it would be impossible sooner to make the proper arrangements at their various ticket offices to supply tickets and to fix rates.

The conference was harmonious throughout, the State being represented by Governor Glenn, State Treasurer Lacy and the special counsel engaged by the Governor, those being ex-Governor C. B. Aycock and Hon.
E. J. Justice, Speaker of the House of Representatives. The railway representatives were Alfred P. Thom, of Washington, and Judge Alexander P.
Humphrey, of Louisville, general counsel of the Southern Railway; Alexander Hamilton, of Petersburg, Va., general counsel, and George B. Elliott, of Wilmington, assistant general counsel of Atlantic Coast Line, and George Rountree, of Wilmington, counsel for R. Nelson Buckley, and other stockholders of the Atlantic Coast Line, who had obtained restraining orders and an interlocutory order from Judge
Pritchard against the Atlantic Coast Line, putting the 2 1-4 cent rate into effect.

Governor Glenn says that on Monday he will address letters to all judges of the Superior and other Courts in the State, asking that no more suits against railroads for violating the rate act until it goes into effect August 8th, be instituted and that all cases now pending be dismissed pending the observance of the law after August 8th. Also that he will address an open letter to the people of the State, asking that no more penalty suits be instituted for violations of the act. He says arduous work and intense excitement of this fight has had him on such a strain for three weeks now he doesn't know how he will exist for a while without excitement until he gets back into normal channels.

General counsel A. P. Thom and others of the representatives of the railroads were asked for expressions from their viewpoint, but would only say, "The transaction today as set out in the articles of agreement and circumstances leading up to it speak for themselves. It remains for us to go back to Asheville now and obtain the consent of Judge Pritchard for this agreement to be effective." Other than this none of them would talk.
The party left about 7 o'clock for Asheville.

THE ANTI-TRUST LAW.

Match Salesman Arrested Last Night
Under New Act of Assembly.

Deputy Sheriff A. T. Piver late last night served a process from Justice Bornemann's court against Mr. Walter Buoy, of Charlotte, representing the Diamond Match Company, of New York, the charge being a violation of the anti-trust law passed by the last General Assembly. The affidavit is made by Mr. Albert Peschau, another traveling salesman, and the attorneys who appear for the prosecution are Hon. John D. Bellamy and George L.
Peschau, who have been conferring with Solicitor Duffy several days in regard to the law.

The affidavit sets forth that the Diamond Match Company recently through Mr. Buoy, sold to the J. C.
Stevenson Company, wholesale corporation of this city, a large quantity of frictionless matches made or controlled by the Diamond Match Company, and required of the purchaser, the Stevenson Company, an agreement that they would not handle any other brand or manufacture of matches, which is alleged to be in violation of Chapter 218 of the Public Laws of North Carolina, known as the antitrust law. The hearing is set for Wednesday, July 31st, before Justice
Bornemann and Mr. Buoy has given
$1,000 bond with Mr. John R. Turren-time as surety for his appearance. The case has a number of interesting features in that many standard brands of goods are sold in much the same way and that wholesale prosecutions might follow a conviction on the charge now preferred.

COWBOYS' BOOTS.

Why the Plainmen Want High and Sharp Pointed Heels.

In Olathe, Kan., there is a factory which makes 200 pairs of cowboy boots each week. Each pair of these boots is made to order. The company has a catalogue, which it sends to the cattle ranches throughout the southwest. It tells the cowboys how to take measurements of their own feet. These are sent to the factory and the boots made and sent out.

A cowboy boot is in a distinct class by itself. The leg must be decorated with fancy lines and curves sewed into the leather, and, above everything else, the heel must be at least two inches high, must curve inward from the back, and the bottom of the heel must be very small.

A cowboy takes especial pride in two things—his hat and his boots. He often pays $50 for his hat, and the best of the cowboy boots cost from $8 to $16. The ordinary shoemaker cannot make boots to suit a true cowboy; he cannot get the heels right, and so the cowboy sends away for them and pays a big price and express charges besides.

The factory in Olathe employs fifty men. All of the work is done by hand, and some of the shoemakers were brought from Germany and England especially to work in that factory.

Cowboys say they have high and sharp pointed heels to their boots not because of vanity and pride, but as a matter of convenience. The high heels prevent the boots from passing through the stirrups, and they are also a brace when on the ground roping an animal. As the steer-pulls to get away the cowboy sinks his sharp heels into the sod, and this prevents him from slipping.—Kansas City Star.

It Pays to Advertise.

A theatrical manager was holding forth on the value of publicity the other day and pointed his moral with this: "When the teacher was absent from the schoolroom, Billy, the mischievous boy of the class, wrote on the blackboard:

"Billy Jones can hug the girls better than any boy in school."

"Upon her return the teacher called him up to her desk.

"William, did you write that?" she asked, pointing to the blackboard.

"Yes, ma'am," said Billy.

"Well, you may stay after school," said she, "as punishment."

"The other pupils waited for Billy to come out, and then they began gazing at him.

"Got a licking, didn't you?"

"Nope," said Billy.

"Got jawed?"

"Nope."

"What did she do?" they asked.

"Shan't tell," said Billy, "but it pays to advertise."—Des Moines Register and Leader.

How They Dance in Hungary.

With the exception of the Spaniards there is no nation in Europe that dances like the Hungarians. They love it with a love that amounts to a passion. They not only go in for it heart and soul, but they will dance on anything, in any sort of weather. A paddock, a village street, a stable yard, the earthen floor of a wayside castra—it is all the same to them. Not the scorching sun or the whirling dust or the pelting rain or the falling snow will deter them. They all dance beautifully too. It seems to be in their blood.

Customs of Brittany.

Brittany alone, of all the provinces of France, seems to have preserved its types and individuality. To be Breton is by no means to be French. The old men to this day chatter in the Celtic tongue. The Breton mother when not at work in the fields sits in the door of her cottage plying the distaff and reciting the old legends and quaint folk songs to the white colfed baby beside her. The Breton woman still wears the costume of her mothers before her and is satisfied in it.

A Contrast.

That was a vivid and popular bit of description in which the vaudeville performer on the stage referred to the official at the front entrance of the theater as the "eight-dollar-a-week man at the door who wears a thousand dollars' worth of gold buttons."

WIND AND HAIL STORMS.

Several Localities in Eastern Part of State Suffered.

(By Wire to The Morning Star.) Raleigh, N. C., July 27.—Several localities in the eastern part of the State were visited by severe wind and hail storms last night. At Kinston two smokestacks of the American Tobacco Company were blown down, and the roof of the Ashley Silk Manufacturing Company was blown off. In Orange county the tobacco crop suffered severely, some large fields being stripped of every leaf.

Jailed a Wife Beater.

Justice Bornemann late last night committed to jail Cary Johnson, colored, on a peace warrant sworn out by his wife, Fannie Johnson, who charges that her husband made dire threats towards her, and that she is in fear of him. Johnson was found at the house of another woman and jealousy is the seat of trouble. The case will be tried Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

NINE LIVES WERE LOST.

Long Live The King.

is the popular cry throughout European countries; while in America, the cry of the present day is "Long live Dr. King's New Discovery, King of Throat and Lung remedies!" of which Mrs. Julia Ryder Paine, Truro, Mass., says: "It never fails to give immediate relief and to quickly cure a cough or cold." Mrs. Paine's opinion is shared by a majority of the inhabitants of this country. New Discovery cures weak lungs and sore throats after all other remedies have failed; and for coughs and colds it's the only sure cure. Guaranteed by R. R. Bellamy, Druggist. 50c and $1.00. Another One of Our Strong Testimonials Wilmington, N. C., July 12th, 1907.

Editor Charlotte Observer:

May I say a few words concerning the work of Dr. McKanna, of the Reidsville Liquor Cure Sanitarium?

One year ago he came to Wilmington to demonstrate the value of his cure for the liquor habit; but being a stranger and his claim too much for human credence, our people did not take much stock in his theory of saving the drunkard. He called the Ministers Association together and offered to treat free as many drunkards as they could get together, provided they were not financially able to pay for the treatment. A large class was secured, and he treated them without cost. During the past year those who have gone back to drinking testify that they did so without any thirst for liquor, as the treatment, according to promise, had killed every particle of desire for strong drink, and that no thirst for liquor had returned.

What I wish to say now is that a number of the worst drunkards in the city who took the cure have held out as sober men, two of whom are now members of my church, and have never had the least thirst for strong drink since they took the cure. I want to say this, because of reports that have gone out to the effect that Dr. McKanna's Liquor Cure will not permanently remove the appetite for Alcoholic drinks.

Respectfully,

FRED D. HALE,

Pastor Wilmington First Baptist Church.

—Says the East Carolina News: Wallace is the first town in the county to buy a fire engine. It is a Chemical engine to cost $1,000 and at the test Thursday night the engine extinguished the fire in short order.

—East Carolina News: "The huckleberry crop has certainly been a failure in this county. There has not been enough on the market to change the color of the children's tongues."

—Raleigh, July 26: The Corporation Commission has instituted suit against the South and Western Railroad for failing to make the returns required by law for the assessment of their property. The penalty is $300 and $100 per day until the law is complied with.

—Goldsboro, July 26: An official rule has been served upon the several railroads entering here, by the Corporation Commission, notifying them that the union passenger station for Goldsboro must be completed according to the plans submitted by the railroads and approved by the commission last January, by November 26 under penalty.

—Laurinburg Exchange: "Everything is in readiness now for our new system of water works, except one of the most essential parts—the water. The first of the wells which are being dug is now 600 feet deep. Several pockets of water have been encountered, but have not been of sufficient supply to meet the requirements of the system, and the work of digging is still going on both night and day."

—East Carolina News: "Carpenters are busy making repairs and new additions to the James Sprunt Institute. This work will be completed before the opening of the school. The James Sprunt will have a splendid opening. Parents should write President J. O. Carr, at Wilmington at once. No better school in Eastern Carolina and located in a delightful country town and an ideal place for schools."

—East Carolina News: "We learn that a few of our truckers have cleared $200 per acre on bell pepper this season. Pepper is a warm number in more than one sense of the word. Onions likewise paid very well, but on account of the Jamestown Exposition and the great influx of onion loving foreigners this odorous nerve building vegetable had to be cut out, and the price of course fell flat at the end of the season."

—Greenville, July 26: Mrs. H. A. Sutton, mother of Mrs. D. J. Whichard, died here yesterday evening suddenly of apoplexy. She was more than 75 years old and has long been one of the kindest and best women of the town. She leaves one daughter, Mrs. D. J. Whichard, and a number of grandchildren, and a large circle of relatives and friends. Mrs. Sutton was a faithful and conscientious Christian and had been for years a member of the Baptist Church.

—Raleigh, N. C., July 26: "As the result of self-administered poison, there died today at a hospital in Winston-Salem one of the most degraded criminals ever known in this State, an aged white man, who came to North Carolina a few years ago from New England, named Thos. Giddings. He had been arrested for criminal assault on one of his two young daughters, and took poison because they would not promise not to testify against him. Before attempting suicide, he shot at his daughter and tried to kill both. At the hospital today, before dying, he confessed the crime, and added that he had been intimate for sometime with his daughters."

—Carolina Truckers' Journal: "We are now in the midst of the cantaloupe, watermelon and vegetable season. Carload shipments are going forward daily, and there are to be seen lively times around the depots of the more important shipping stations throughout this whole territory. Over the Coast Line and Seaboard Whole-train loads of watermelons are rolling northward every day. Huckleberries are also going forward, although the major part of the crop has been moved. Tomatoes are also quite plentiful now and the price situation is fairly satisfactory. The ruling price of the principal items on the leading markets during past few days have been about as follows: Peaches, $1.50 to $2.50 per crate; raspberries 8 to 10 cents; blackberries, 7 to 8 cents; huckleberries 10 to 14 cents; cantaloupes, $1.50 to $2.50 per crate; watermelon of an automobile line from Winston-Salem."

—Kernersville, N. C., July 26: There is a fair prospect for the establishment of an automobile line from Winston-Salem and High Point by the way of Kernersville. A gentleman who is interested in the proposed line was in the city yesterday, and intimated to your correspondent, that the prospect was assuming definite shape and it was his opinion that the line would be established in the near future."

—Greensboro Telegram: Hon. Ashley Home, of Clayton, one of the candidates for the next seat in the Governor's chair was in the city yesterday attending meetings of the directors of the Dixie and North State Fire Insurance Companies. Mr. Home says that each of the three candidates are confident that they will easily be elected in the campaign of 1908. He says that the fight is still a three cornered affair but he would much prefer that to a square one. However, he said that the final event is too far off yet to tell anything definite, but indications in his favor are becoming brighter day by day."

A Striking Likeness.

(Original.)
Bayard Young, a young gentleman of prepossessing appearance and fashionable attire, swinging a light cane, entered the Union station as a train rolled in. He was expecting a friend who did not come. But some one else came, who proceeded to disarrange the precision of Mr. Young's neckwear and otherwise ruffle his equanimity. A young lady, plainly but neatly dressed, descended from a car, and her glance lighting on the gentleman in question, she rushed toward him, threw her arms about his neck and covered his face with kisses.

Now, while young men are not usually averse to being kissed, they don't like to be taken by surprise. Mr. Young made an effort to disengage himself from the embrace, at least so far as to get a look at the kisser. This surprised the girl, and she, too, drew away. Then a color rose to her cheek, and, covering her face with both hands, she turned and ran away as fast as she could. The first thing Mr. Young did after her departure was to rearrange his disordered neckwear. Then he missed a scarfpin with a handsome pearl set in it that had been there before the sudden attack. Rushing after the girl, he caught her just as she was leaving the station.

"I'll trouble you for my scarfpin," he said.
She looked up, marks of distress and confusion still on her face. "I mistook you for my brother," she said.

"My scarfpin. Give it to me at once or I will call a policeman."
The girl's manner changed in a twinkling. Her eyes flashed ominously. "How dare you, sir!"

"I'm used to such games," he retorted.
"You certainly must be. Such people being your associates, you would not be expected to know a true lady when you see one."

At that moment Young saw his pin hanging down from a bit of lingerie under the lady's throat. He snatched it away from her and put it in his scarf. She appeared to be very much astonished, too much astonished in fact to speak. When she did she said:

"It must have got caught in the lace when I—"

"Hugged me."

She stamped her foot and flashed at him like a tigress. Then, obeying a sudden thought, she opened her pocket-book and, taking out a card, handed it to him. When he had read it the astonishment was transferred from the girl to him.

"Are you Ralph Roswell's sister?"

"He was my chum at college."

"I am very much surprised to hear it. I supposed that he never associated with young men who were intimate with women who play games."

Young looked uncomfortable. His hand went up to his hat, and he uncovered deferentially.

"I suppose I owe you an apology," he said.

"No apology will be accepted."

"The circumstances were deceiving. You must admit that I had apparent cause for—"

"Mistaking me for a thief?"

"I—the fact is"—He took out his handkerchief and wiped the perspiration from his forehead. "Is there any atonement I can make?"

"None whatever. One who mistakes a lady for a common swindler—confidence woman I believe they are called—commits an unpardonable sin."

With this she turned contemptuously and strode away. Young followed her.

"Leave me at once or I will call a policeman."

"I would rather go to jail than part in this way."

"That would be no hardship. You would be with your acknowledged associates."

Young concluded to make a masked attack in flank.

"Ralph and I look so much alike that in college they called us the twins."

"There's not the slightest resemblance."

"How, then, did you come to mistake me for him?"

"I—he—was to meet me."

"By Jove, there comes Ralph now, hurrying along to reach the station before the train arrives! How the deuce are we to explain being together when he knows I've never been introduced to you—never have seen you?"

The girl winced.

"Leave him to me. Hello, old boy! What's the matter with your watch?"

Brother and sister kissed, the sister with restraint.

"How did you two know each other?" asked the brother.

"Know each other?" replied Bayard.

"Why, you see it was the likeness."

"What likeness?"

In prevarication a woman can always give points to a man. The girl came in to save the day. "Why, your friend couldn't help seeing the family resemblance between you and me."

"You're as like as twins," Young put in. "Your sister looked so crestfallen I couldn't help taking care of her."

"I'm glad you were good to her."

"I shall never forget it," said the girl, with a vindictive flash in her eye.

"Please do," moaned Young. Then, remembering himself, "I mean please don't."

"What's the matter with you two?" asked the brother. "You look and act as if you'd been caught stealing."

This unlucky hit came near bringing out the denouement, but the girl started on, and the denouement was delayed till a year later, when it was told at the wedding breakfast of Bayard Young and the girl he had mistaken for a thief.

ELLSWORTH EMERSON.

The Speculator.

(Original.)
There are men who may be said to assimilate best with the condition of war, pestilence or famine. They can never do the drudgery necessary to a small beginning. Give one of them the assurance that by working in a humdrum field for a few years he may secure not only competence, but fortune, and he will not be able to bring himself to suffer the restraint and endure the steady labor required. But he will thrive under adversity.

Bushnell Bugbee was one of this kind. He had been given a splendid opportunity by an uncle to work up from a subordinate position to succeed his uncle, who was childless, in the management of the business. He proved himself incompetent, only distinguishing himself once, when the store caught fire. Then his was the only cool head about the premises, and he saved the place from destruction.

His uncle finally discharged him, and he drifted, doing nothing till, when at the lowest ebb, he married. He said he thought marriage would settle him. Perhaps a better statement of the case would be that the condition of a married man with no income would create conditions under which he could act. At any rate it did.

He had a hundred dollars at the time of his marriage, and he proceeded to lose that at a game of faro. Then one morning when he and his wife had nothing in the house for breakfast he started out to find some means of bettering his condition. Strolling along a street aimlessly with his hands in his pockets, he came to a stone front dwelling, from the stoop of which protruded a red flag, denoting an auction. There is something in this symbol when hung from such a place denoting trouble.

Ten to one those who have lived in the house died or failed in business or met with some calamity to render the sale necessary. Possibly it was some such thought that led Bugbee to enter. He found a splendid house with fine furniture of an olden type that was to be sold under the hammer. He looked the property over with the critical eye of one who was considering whether it was good enough for him.

A crowd was gathering, and presently the auctioneer mounted a table and called for a bid. Some one started with an offer of $20,000, which was not half the value of the property. The bidding was spirited till $30,000 was reached, when all but two bidders dropped out. One of these seemed determined to secure what was evidently a bargain, and the other after vying with him till the figure of $34,000 was reached gave up the contest and withdrew.

At this juncture Bushnell Bugbee felt a stiff piece of paper slipped into his hand, and a downward glance told him it was a bank bill. At the same time a man standing next to him whispered to him to bid against the winner. Bugbee, who was getting hungry for his breakfast, obeyed. He raised the other bidder to $38,500 and, seeing him about to weaken, looked around for the man who had employed him for a dummy. He was nowhere to be seen. When he turned again he saw his opponent leaving the room, and the auctioneer called to him:

"What name, sir?"

There was not the slightest quiver in the successful bidder's voice as he answered, "Bushnell Bugbee."

"All right. I want a check for 10 per cent of the purchase, or $3,850."

At that moment a man came hurrying into the room to learn that the sale was over and the property knocked down. He got his information from the auctioneer, and Bugbee saw the latter point in his direction. Before he could remark upon the auctioneer's request for a check the disappointed man approached him and requested to see him in another room.

"Do you wish this property for your own use or as a speculation?" asked the late comer.

"I would prefer to live in it," replied Bugbee truthfully.

"It belonged to my father. My brother lived in it, but speculated in stocks and lost all his money. I returned this morning to find the old homestead was about to be sold. I have made money on the Pacific coast and don't want to see the house or furniture go out of the family. Please name a sum that you will take for your bargain."

"Nothing would induce me to stand in a man's way to recover the home of his ancestors," said Bugbee. "If you will name a sum you consider this home worth to you, I will accept it."

"This is indeed generosity," said the other. "I have not asked what you paid for it, but I have been here in time I would certainly not have stopped bidding under $50,000. I will cheerfully give you that price for it and thank you very much."

"The favor is mine," replied Bugbee. "In the opportunity to restore one's home to him. Your check for $11,500 is all you are indebted to me."

The man drew a check book from his pocketbook, wrote a check for the amount and handed it to Bugbee, and then drew another for $38,500, which he gave the auctioneer. Pressing Bugbee's hand gratefully, he left the house.

Mr. Bugbee has since become immensely rich. They say in the stock market that he is a bird of ill omen, for he never appears there unless stocks are being thrown over like furniture out of a burning building. At such times a beautiful smile plays about his lips in grim contrast with the agitation about him, and he gives orders to buy in such quantities as to warrant his being taken for a lunatic. After the storm has passed he has made another fortune.

CHAPTER XVII.

IN this position Jack slept off and on, or, rather, dozed into a kind of semistupor from which he awoke with a start now and then, as he thought he heard again the mingled cries of devotion and malediction. At last he slept soundly and awoke refreshed, but hungry. The loaf lay beside him, and with his knife he cut a slice from it, munching the coarse bread with more of relish than he had thought possible when he first saw it. Then he took out another cigarette, struck a match, looked at his watch and lit the cigarette. It was ten minutes past 2. He wondered if a night had intervened, but thought it unlikely. He had landed very early in the morning, and now it was afternoon. He was fearfully thirsty, but could not bring himself to drink from that stream of death. Once more he heard the bolts shot back.

"They are going to throw the poor wretches into the sea," he muttered. But the yellow gleam of a lantern showed him it was his own door that had been unlocked.

"You are to see the governor," said the jailer gruffly. "Come with me." Jack sprang to the floor of his cell, repressing a cry of delight. Nothing the grim governor could do to him would make his situation any worse, and perhaps his persuasive powers upon that official might result in some amelioration of his position. In any case there was the brief respite of the interview, and he would gladly have chummed with the devil himself to be free a few moments from this black pit.

Although the outside door of the governor's room stood open, the room was not as well illumined as it had been before, for the sun had now gone round to the other side of the island, but to the prisoner's aching eyes it seemed a chamber of refuge. The same lamp was burning on the table, giving forth an odor of bad oil, but in addition to this two candles were lighted, which supplemented in some slight measure the efforts of the lamp. At the end of the table lay a number of documents under a paperweight, arranged with the neat precision of a methodical man. The governor had been warming his hands over the brazier, but ceased when Lermontoff was brought up standing before him. He lifted the paperweight, took from under it the two letters which Lermontoff had given to the steward on the steamer and handed them to the prisoner, who thus received them back for the second time.

"I wish to say," remarked the governor, with an air of bored indifference which was evidently quite genuine, "that if you make any further attempt to communicate with the authorities or with friends you will bring on yourself punishment which will be unpleasant."

"As a subject of the czar I have the right to appeal to him," said the prince. "The appeal you have written here," replied the governor, "would have proved useless even if it had been delivered. The czar knows nothing of the Trozmondoff, which is a stronghold entirely under the control of the grand dukes and of the navy. The Trozmondoff never gives up a prisoner."

"Then I am here for a lifetime?" "Yes," rejoined the governor, with frigid calmness, "and if you give me no trouble you will save yourself some inconvenience."

"Do you speak French?" asked the prince.

"Net."

"English?"

"Net."

"Italian?"

"Net."

"German?"

"Da."

"Then," continued Lermontoff in German, "I desire to say a few words to you which I don't wish the jailer to understand. I am Prince Ivan Lermontoff, a personal friend of the czar's, who, after all, is master of the grand dukes and the navy also. If you will help to put me into communication with him, I will guarantee that no harm comes to you and, furthermore, will make you a rich man."

The governor slowly shook his head. "What you ask is impossible. Riches are nothing to me. Bribery may do much in other parts of the empire, but it is powerless in the Trozmondoff. I shall die in the room adjoining this, as my predecessor died. I am quite as much a prisoner in the Trozmondoff as is your highness. No man who has once set foot in this room either as governor, employee or prisoner is allowed to see the mainland again, and thus the secret has been well kept. We have had many prisoners of equal rank with your highness, friends of the czar, too, I dare say, but they all died on the rock and were buried in the Baltic."

"May I not be permitted to receive certain supplies if I pay for them? That is allowed in other prisons."

The governor shook his head.

"I can let you have a blanket," he said, "and a pillow or a sheepskin if you find it cold at first, but my power here is very limited, and, as I tell you, the officers have little more comfort than the prisoners."

"Oh, I don't care anything about comfort," protested Lermontoff. "What I want is some scientific apparatus. I am a student of science. I have nothing to do with politics and have never been implicated in any plot. Some one in authority has made a stupid mistake, and so I am here. This mistake I am quite certain will be discovered and remedied. I hold no malice and will say nothing of the place once I am free. It is no business of mine. But I do not wish to have the intervening time wasted. I should like to buy some electrical machinery and materials, for which I am willing to pay any price that is asked."

"Do you understand electricity?" questioned the governor, and for the first time his impassive face showed a glimmer of interest.

"Do I understand electricity? Why, for over a year I have been chief electrician on a warship."

"Perhaps then," said the governor, relapsing into Russian again, "you can tell me what is wrong with our dynamo here in the rock. After repeated requisition they sent machinery for lighting our offices and passages with electricity. They apparently did not care to send an electrician to the Trozmondoff, but forwarded instead some books of instruction. I have been working at it for two years and a half, but I am still using oil lamps and candles. We wired the place without difficulty." He held up the candle and showed, depending from the ceiling, a chandelier of electric lamps which Lermontoff had not hitherto noticed, various brackets and one or two stand lamps in a corner, with green silk covered wire attached.

"May I see your dynamo?" asked Lermontoff.

The governor, with one final warning of his hands, took up a candle, told the jailer to remove the shade from the lamp and bring it, led the way along a passage and then into a room where the prisoner, on first entering, had heard the roar of water.

"What's this you have, a turbine? Does it give you any power?"

"Oh, it gives power enough," said the governor.

"Let's see how you turn on the stream."

The governor set the turbine at work, and the dynamo began to hum, a sound which to the educated ear of Lermontoff told him several things.

"That's all right, governor; turn it off. This is a somewhat old fashioned dynamo, but it ought to give you all the light you can use. You must be a natural born electrician, or you never could have got this machinery working as well as it does."

The dull eyes of the governor glowed for one brief moment, then resumed their customary expression of saddened tiredness.

"Now," said Jack, throwing off his coat, "I want a wrench, screwdriver, hammer and a pair of pliers if you have got them."

"Here is the tool chest," said the governor, and Jack found all he needed. Bidding the governor hold the candle here, there and elsewhere and ordering the jailer about as if he were an apprentice, Jack set energetically to work, and for half an hour no one spoke.

"Turn on that water again," he commanded.

The governor did so, and the machine whirled with quite a different note. Half a dozen electric lamps in the room flooded the place with a dazzling white glow.

"There you are," cried Jack, rubbing the oil off his hands on a piece of coarse sack. "Now, Tommy, put these things back in the tool chest," he said to the jailer. Then to the governor: "Let's see how things look in the big room."

The passage was lit, and the governor's room showed every mark on wall, ceiling and floor.

"I told you, governor," said Jack with a laugh, "that I didn't know why I was sent here, but now I understand. Providence took pity on you and ordered me to strike a light."

At that moment the jailer entered with his jingling keys, and the enthusiastic expression faded from the governor's face, leaving it once more coldly impassive, but he spoke in German instead of Russian.

"I am very much indebted to your highness, and it grieves me that our relationship remains unchanged."

"Oh, that's all right," cried Lermontoff breezily. "If it is within your power to allow me to come and give you some lessons in electricity and the care of dynamos, I shall be very glad to do so."

To this offer the governor made no reply, but he went on still in German: "I shall transfer you to cell No. 1, which is not only more comfortable, but the water there is pure. Did you say you spoke English?"

"Yes; quite as well as I do Russian."

The governor continued, with, nevertheless, a little hesitation: "On the return of the steamer there will be an English prisoner. I will give him cell No. 2, and if you don't talk so loud that the jailer hears you it may perhaps make the day less wearisome."

"You are very kind," said Jack, rigidly suppressing any trace of either emotion or interest as he heard the intelligence, leaping at once to certain conclusions nevertheless. "I shan't ask for anything more, much as I should like to mention candles, matches and tobacco."

"It is possible you may find all three in No. 1 before this time tomorrow." Then in Russian the governor said to the jailer:

"See if No. 1 is ready."

The jailer departed, and the governor, throwing open a drawer in his table, took out two candles, a box of matches and a packet of cigarettes.

"Put these in your pocket," he said. "The cell door opens very slowly, so you will always know when the jailer is coming. In that case blow out your light and conceal your candle. It will last the longer."

The jailer returned.

"The cell is ready, excellency," he said.

"Take away the prisoner," commanded the governor gruffly.

CHAPTER XVIII.

CELL No. 1 was a great improvement on No. 9. There was no shelf of rock or stone bench, but a cot bed in the corner, a table and a wooden chair. The living spring issued from the living rock in a corner of the room. When the jailer and his assistant had retired and shoved in the outside bolts Jack lit his candle and a cigarette, feeling almost happy. He surveyed the premises now with more care. The bed was of iron and fastened to the floor. On the top of it was a mattress, a pillow and a pair of blankets. At its head a little triangular shelf of rock had been left in the corner, and on this reposed a basin of tin, while a coarse piece of sack took the place of a towel. Jack threw off his overcoat and flung it on the bed, intent on a satisfactory wash. He heard something jingle in the pockets and, forgetting for the moment what it could be, possibly be, thrust his hand in and pulled out a glass stoppered bottle of oak. He held it out at arm's length and stared at it for some moments like a man hypnotized.

"Holy St. Peter!" he cried. "To think that I should have forgotten this!"

He filled the tin basin with water and placed it on the table. Again he dissolved a minute portion of the chemical and again filled the syringe.

"I must leave no marks on the wall that may arouse attention," he said, and, taking the full syringe to the arch over the torrent and placing the candle on the floor beside him, he gently pushed in the piston. The spray struck the rock, and the rock dissolved slightly but perceptibly. Coming back to the table, he stood for a few minutes in deep thought. Although the cot bed was fixed to the floor, and although it was possible that the shelf in the next cell coincided with its position, the risk of discovery was too great to cut a passage between the two cells there. The obvious spot to attack was the interior of the tunnel through which the streamlet ran, but Jack, testing the temperature of the water with his hand, doubted his physical ability to remain in that ice cold current more than a few minutes at a time, and if he worked in the tunnel he would be all but submerged. He feared he would perish with cold and cramp before he had made any impression on the rock.

To the edge of the stream he drew the table, and, mounting it, examined the upper orifice through which the water escaped when the cell was full. He found he could stand on the table and work in comfort until he had excavated sufficient rock to allow him to clamber into the upper tunnel and so continue his operations. The water he used would flow through the tunnel and down to the main stream in the next cell. All he had to do was to dissolve a semicircular hole in the rock that would bend around the end of those steel bars and enter the tunnel again on the other side. Eager to be at work, he took the full basin, shoved it far along the tunnel until it was stopped by the bars; then, placing his candle beside it and standing on the table, he began operations.

The limestone under the influence of the spray dissolved very slowly, and by the time the basin of water was exhausted all the effect visible under the light of the candle was an exceedingly slight circular impression which was barely visible to the naked eye.

"I must make the solution stronger, I think," he said, grievously disappointed at the outcome of his labors, and as he looked at it he heard the clank of the withdrawing bolts. Blowing out the candle, he sprang to the floor of the cell, picked up the table, set it down in the center of the room, groped for the chair and sat down, his heart palpitating wildly at the fear of discovery.

Followed as usual by the man with the lantern, the jailer came in, carrying a bowl of hot, steaming soup, which he placed on the table; then he took from his pocket a spoon, a small hunk of black bread and a piece of cheese. In the light of the lantern Lermontoff consulted his watch and found it was 6 o'clock. The jailer took the lantern from his assistant, held it high and looked round the room, while Lermontoff gazed at him in anxiety, wondering whether that brutal looking official suspected anything. Apparently he did not, but merely wished to satisfy himself that everything was in order, for he said more mildly than he had hitherto spoken:

"It is a long time since any one occupied this cell."

Then his eye rested on the vacant corner shelf.

"Ah, excellency," he continued, "pardon me. I have forgotten. I must bring you a basin."

"I'd rather you brought me a candle," said Lermontoff nonchalantly, although his lips were dry, and he moistened them as he spoke. Then, to learn whether money was valueless on the rock, as the governor had intimated, he drew from his pocket one of the remaining gold pieces, glad that he happened to have so many, and slipped it into the palm of the jailer's hand, whose fingers clutched it as eagerly as if he were in St. Petersburg.

"I think a candle can be managed, excellency. Shall I bring a cup?"

"I wish you would."

The door was again locked and bolted, but before Lermontoff had finished his soup and bread and cheese it was opened again. The jailer placed a tin basin similar to the former one on the ledge, put a candle and a candlestick on the table and a tin cup beside them.

"I thought there was no part of Russia where bribery was extinct," said the prince to himself as the door closed again for the night.

After supper Lermontoff again shifted his table, stood upon it, lit his candle and resumed his tunneling, working hard until after midnight. His progress was deplorably slow, and the spraying of the rock proved about as tiring a task as ever he had undertaken. His second basinful of solution was made a little stronger, but without perceptible improvement in its effect. On ceasing operations for the night he found himself in a situation common to few prisoners—that of being embarrassed with riches. He possessed two basins, and one of them must be concealed. Of course he might leave his working basin in the upper tunnel where it had rested when the jailer had brought in his supper, but he realized that at any moment the lantern's rays might strike its shining surface and so bring on an investigation of the upper tunnel, certain to prove the destruction of his whole scheme. A few minutes' thought, however, solved the problem admirably. He placed the basin face downward in the rapid stream, which swept it to the iron bars between the two cells, and there it lay quite concealed with the swift water rippling over it. This done, he flung off his clothes and got into bed, not awakening until the jailer and his assistant brought in bread, cheese and coffee for breakfast.

The next day he began to feel the inconveniences of the governor's friendship and wished he were safely back to the time when one loaf lasted four days, for if such were now the case he would be free of the constant state of tension which the ever recurring visits of the jailer caused. He feared that some day he might become so absorbed in his occupation that he would not hear the withdrawing of the bolt, and thus, as it were, be caught in the act.

Shortly after lunch the governor sent for him and asked many questions pertaining to the running of the dynamo. Lermontoff concealed his impatience and set about his instructions with exemplary earnestness. Russian text books on electricity at hand were of the most rudimentary description, and, although the governor could speak German, he could not read it, so the two volumes he possessed in that language were closed to him. Therefore John was compelled to begin at the very A B C of the science.

The governor, however, became so deeply interested that he momentarily forgot his caution, unlocked a door and took Lermontoff into a room which he saw was the armory and ammunition storehouse of the prison. On the floor of this chamber the governor pointed out a large battery of accumulators and asked what they were for. Lermontoff explained the purposes of the battery, meanwhile examining it thoroughly and finding that many of the cells had been all but ruined in transit through the falling away of the composition in the grids. Something like half of the accumulators, however, were intact and workable. These he uncoupled and brought into the dynamo room, where he showed the governor the process of charging. He saw in the storeroom a box containing incandescent lamps, coils of silk covered wire and other material that made his eyes glimmer with delight. He spoke in German:

"If you will give me a coil of this wire, one or two of the lamps and an accumulator, or, indeed, half a dozen of them, I will trouble you no more for candles."

The governor did not reply at the moment, but a short time after asked Lermontoff in Russian how long it would be before the accumulators were charged. Lermontoff stated the time, and the governor told the jailer to bring the prisoner from the cell at that hour, and so dismissed his instructor.

One feature of this interview which pleased Lermontoff was that, however much the governor became absorbed in these lessons, he never allowed himself to remain alone with his prisoner. It was evident that in his cooler moments the governor had instructed the jailer and his assistant to keep ever at the heels of the prince and always on the alert. Two huge revolvers were thrust underneath the belt of the jailer, and the lantern holder was similarly armed. Lermontoff was pleased with this, for if the governor had trusted him entirely, even though he demanded no verbal parole, it would have gone against his grain to strike down the chief, as he ruthlessly intended to do when the time was ripe for it, and in any case, he told himself, no matter how friendly the governor might be, he had the misfortune to stand between his prisoner and liberty.

Lermontoff was again taken from his cell about half an hour before the time he had named for the completion of the charging, and, although the governor said nothing of his intention, the jailer and his man brought to the cell six charged batteries, a coil of wire and a dozen lamps. Lermontoff now

Note of Warning

To The Public:

The Keeley Cure has now been in successful operation for 28 consecutive years and the merits and reputation of the Dr. Leslie E. Keeley Remedies have been thoroughly established. Because of this fact, many imitators are seeking to turn this knowledge to their own advantage by falsely claiming that they are able to sell and administer our remedies and treatment. It should be borne in mind that the Keeley Remedies are only to be obtained at establishments known by the uniform name of The Keeley Institute. There is one or more of these establishments in nearly every State in the Union, besides several in foreign countries. THERE IS ONLY ONE KEELEY INSTITUTE IN THE STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, AND THAT IS LOCATED AT GREENSBORO. At all Keeley Institutes the remedies used are procured from our laboratory, and in all cases they are administered by physicians who have been especially instructed by us. It follows, therefore, that all other establishments claiming to be able to sell our remedies and administer our treatment are obtaining money under false pretenses and will be dealt with accordingly. The public is warned that under no circumstances can Keeley remedies or treatment be obtained except at authorized Keeley Institutes. These imitators sometimes adopt similar names to those by which our remedies are known, but if patients will take pains to see that they are in an authorized Keeley Institute they need not fear imposition. The Keeley remedies will cure incurable, all kinds of drug using, the tobacco habit and neurasthenia; they are never administered in hospitals and no patients are treated at Keeley Institutes for other than the above named diseases.

ROCK IN BALTIC

changed his working methods. He began each night as soon as he had finished dinner and worked till nearly morning, sleeping all day except when interrupted by the jailer. Jack, following the example of Robinson Crusoe, attempted to tie knots on the tail of time by cutting notches with his knife on the leg of the table, but most days he forgot to perform this operation, and so his wooden almanac fell hopelessly out of gear. He estimated that he had been a little more than a week in prison when he heard by the clang of the bolt that the next coil was to have an occupant.

"I must prepare a welcome for him," he said, and so turned out the electric light at the end of the long, flexible wire. He had arranged a neat little switch of the accumulator, and so snapped the light on and off at his pleasure without the trouble of unscrewing the nuts which held in place one of the copper ends of the wire. Going to the edge of the stream and lighting his candle, he placed the glass bulb in the current, paid out the flexible line attached to it and allowed the bulb to run the risk of being smashed against the iron bars of the passage, but the little globe negotiated the rapids without even a perceptible clink and came to rest in the bed of the torrent somewhere about the center of the next cell, tugging like a fish on a hook. Then Jack mounted the table, leaned into the upper tunnel and listened.

"I protest," Drummond cried, speaking loudly, as if the volume of sound would convey meaning to alien ears—"I protest against this as an outrage and demand my right of communication with the British ambassador."

Jack heard the jailer growl, "This loaf of bread will last you for four days," but as this statement was made in Russian it conveyed no more meaning to the Englishman than had his own protest of a moment before brought intelligence to the jailer. The door clanged shut, and there followed a dead silence.

The jailer and his assistant over at the heels of the prince.

"Now we ought to hear some good old British oaths," said Jack to himself, but the silence continued.

"Hello, Alan," cried Jack through the bars. "I said you would be nabbed if you didn't leave St. Petersburg. You'll pay attention to me next time I warn you."

There was no reply, and Jack became alarmed at the continued stillness. Then he heard his friend mutter:

"I'll be seeing visions by and by. I thought my brain was stronger than it is—could have sworn that was Jack's voice."

Jack got speedily and quietly down, turned on the switch and hopped upon the table again, peering through. He knew that the stream had now become a river of fire and that it was sending to the ceiling an unholy, unearthly glow.

"Oh, damn it all!" groaned Drummond, at which Jack roared with laughter.

"Alan," he shouted, "fish out that electric bulb from the creek and hold it aloft. Then you'll see where you are. I'm in the next cell—Jack Lamont, electrician and coppersmith; all orders promptly attended to; best of references and prices satisfactory."

"Jack, is that really you or have I gone demented?"

"Oh, you always were demented, Alan. But it is I right enough. Pick up the light and tell me what kind of a cell you've got."

"Horrible!" cried Drummond, surveying his situation. "Walls apparently of solid rock, and this uncanny stream running across the floor."

"How are you furnished? Shelf of rock, stone bench?"

"No; there's a table, cot bed and a wooden chair."

"Why, my dear man, what are you growling about? They have given you one of the best rooms in the hotel. You're in the star chamber."

"Where in the name of heaven are we?"

"Didn't you recognize the rock from the deck of a steamer?"

"I never saw the deck of a steamer?"

"Then how did you come here?"

"I was writing a letter in my room when some one threw a sack over my head and tied me up in a bundle, so that it was as close shave I wasn't smothered. I was taken in what I suppose was a cab and flung into what I afterward learned was the hold of a steamer. When the ship stopped, I was carried like a sack of meal on some one's shoulder and unhampered before a gaunt specter in uniform in a room so dazzling with electric light that I could hardly see. That was a few minutes ago. Now I am here and starving. Where is this prison?"

"Like the mikado, as Kate would say, the authorities are bent on making the punishment fit the crime. You are in the Rock in the Baltic, which you fired at with that gun of yours. I told you those suave officials at St. Petersburg were playing with you."

"But why have they put you here, Jack?"

"Oh, I was like the good dog Tray, who associated with questionable company. I suppose, and thus got into trouble."

"I'm sorry."

"You ought to be glad. I'm going to get out of this place, and I don't believe you could break jail unassisted in twenty years. Here is where science confronts brutality. I say, Drummond, bring your table over to the corner and mount it, then we can talk without shouting. Not much chance of any one outside hearing us even if we do clamor, but this is a damp situation, and loud talk is bad for the throat. Cut a slice of that brown bread and lunch with me. You'll find it not half bad, as you say in England, especially when you are hungry. Now," continued Jack as his friend stood opposite him and they found by experiment that their combined reach was not long enough to enable them to shake hands through the bars, "now, while you are luxuriating in the menu of the Trozmondoff I'll give you a sketch of my plan for escape."

"Do," said Drummond.

"I happen to have with me a pair of bottles containing a substance which if dissolved in water and sprinkled on this rock will disintegrate it. It proves rather slow work. I must admit, but I intend to float in to you one of the bottles and the apparatus, so that you may help me on your side, which plan has the advantage of giving you useful occupation and allowing us to complete our task in half the time, like the engineers on each side of the Simplon tunnel."

"If there are bars in the lower watercourse," objected Drummond, "won't you run a risk of breaking your bottle against them?"

"Not the slightest. I have just sent that much thinner electric lamp through, but in this case I'll just tie up the bottle and squirt gun in my stocking, attach that to the wire, and the current will do the rest. You can unload and I'll pull my stocking back again. If I dared wrench off a table leg, I could perhaps shove bottle and syringe through to you from here, but the material would come to a dead center in the middle of this tunnel unless I had a stick to push it within your reach."

"Very well; we'll work away until our excavation connects and we have made it of sufficient diameter for you to squeeze through. You are then in my cell. We put out our lights, and you conceal yourself behind the door. Jailer and man with the lantern come in. You must be very careful not to close the door, because if you once shove it shut we can't open it from this side, even though it is unlocked and the bolts drawn. It fits like wax and almost hermetically seals the room. You spring forward and deal the jailer with your fist one of your justly celebrated English knockdown blows. Immediately after felling the man with the lantern. Knowing something of the weight of your blow, I take it that neither of the two men will recover consciousness until we have taken off their outer garments, secured revolvers and keys. Then we lock them in, you and I on the outside."

"My dear Jack, we don't need any tunnel to accomplish that. The first time these two men come into my room I can knock them down as easily here as there."

"I thought of that, and perhaps you could, but you must remember we have only one shot. If you made a mistake, if the lantern man bolted and fired his pistol and once closed the door—he would not need to pause to lock it—why, we are done for. I should be perfectly helpless in the next room, and after the attempt they'd either drown us or put us into worse cells as far apart as possible."

"I don't think I should miss fire," said Drummond confidently. "Still I see the point and will obey orders."

"My official position on the rock ever since I arrived has been that of electrical tutor in chief to the governor. I have started his dynamo working and have wired such portions of the place as were not already wired before. During these lessons I have kept my eyes open. So far as the prison is concerned, there are the governor, a sort of head clerk, the jailer and his assistant—four men, and that is all. The jailer's assistant appears to be the cook of the place, although the cooking done is of the most limited description. The black bread is brought from St. Petersburg, I think, as also tinned meat and soup, so the cuisine is on a somewhat limited scale."

"Do you mean to say that only these four men are in charge of the prison?"

"Practically so, but there is the garrison as well. The soldiers live in a suit of rooms directly above us, and as near as I can form an opinion there are fourteen men and two officers. When a steamer arrives, they draft as many soldiers as are necessary, unload the boat, and then the Tommies go upstairs again. The military section apparently holds little intercourse with the officials, whom they look upon as jailers. I should judge that the military officer is chief of the rock because when he found the governor's room lit by electricity he demanded the same for his quarters. That's how I came to get upstairs. Now, these stairs are hewn in the rock, are circular, guarded by heavy oaken doors top and bottom, and these doors possess steel bolts on both sides of them. It is thus possible for either the military authorities upstairs or the civil authorities to isolate themselves from the others. In case of a revolt among the soldiers the governor could bolt them into their attic, and they would find great difficulty in getting out. Now, my plan of procedure is this: We will disarm jailer and assistant, take their keys, outside garments and caps. The jailer's toggery will fit you, and the other fellow's may do for me. Then we will lock them in here, and if we meet clerk or governor in the passages we will have time to overcome either or both before they are aware of the change. I'll go up the circular stair, bolt from the inside the upper door and afterward bolt the lower door. Then we open all the cells and release the other prisoners, descend from the rock, get into the Finnish fishing boat, keep clear of the two cannon that are up above us and sail for the Swedish coast. We can't miss it. We have only to travel west, and ultimately we are safe. There is only one danger, which is that we may make our attempt when the steamer is here, but we must chance that."

"Isn't there any way of finding out? Couldn't you pump the governor?"

"He is always very much on his guard and is a taciturn man. The moment the tunnel is finished I shall question about some further electrical material, and then perhaps I may get a hint about the steamer. I imagine she comes irregularly, so the only safe plan would be for us to make our attempt just after she had departed."

"Would there be any chance of our finding a number of the military downstairs?"

"I don't think so. Now that they have their electric light they spend their time playing cards and drinking vodka."

"Very well, Jack; that scheme seems reasonably feasible. Now get through your material to me and issue your instructions."

THREE BOTTLES AND WHAT THEY DID FOR A VET. INARY OF WILMINGTON.

The price of three bottles at Dr. Green's is $1.50 but the investment may be less if you buy one at a time, for they are mighty powerful cures of all stomach troubles as Veterinary J. D. Sidbury discovered, for he writes as follows:

Dr. Richards' Dyspepsia Tablet Association, 53 and 55 Worth street, New York.

Gentlemen: "I cannot speak too strongly in praise of Dr. Richards' Dyspepsia Tablets. About a month ago I got one bottle of these tablets at Dr. Green's Drug store, and as soon as I began using them, I noticed a marked improvement in my health. For almost two years I had been subject to frequent severe attacks of indigestion and had tried many remedies both in liquid and tablet form. My appetite was poor; felt distressed after eating, and had dizzy and fainting spells. I can honestly say that after taking only three bottles of your remedy, I am entirely cured of all my old troubles and shall deem it a pleasure to speak to all my friends about this splendid remedy. I thank you very much for all the good they have done me and wish you much success in this locality."

HIS SWEET REVENGE.

Upon Inheriting a Fortune Johnson Destroys His Worst Enemy.

"And to my beloved nephew, Hiram Johnson, I bequeath the sum of $100,000."

"What—what's that?" gasped the nephew.

"To my beloved nephew, Hiram Johnson," repeated the lawyer who was reading the will, "I bequeath the sum of $100,000."

"Do—do you mean to say that I am now worth all that money? And do—do you mean to say I can now throw up my job at Keepemdown & Kickem's?"

"You can, sir."

"And that—and that I won't have to leap out of bed after this when the alarm clock goes off?"

"A man of your wealth, sir, can sleep all day," replied the lawyer as he held out his hand. "Allow me to congratulate you."

But Mr. Johnson waved him back and stood like one dazed for a few moments. Then he reached for his hat and ran out the front door and dashed up the street. Thinking the good fortune had affected his brain, the lawyer hastened after him, and he was soon joined by others in the pursuit. Hiram made straight for the little room in the boarding house he had so long called home, and as he rushed up the steps four policemen and a score of men, women and children were at his heels. When the officers had succeeded in breaking open the door that Hiram had closed and locked after him, he had an ax in his hands and was pounding something to pieces on the floor of the room.

"Poor fellow, he has gone mad," remarked one of the policemen.

"You've got another guess coming," chuckled the man who had just inherited a fortune as he jumped up and down on the wreck he had made. "I'm only knocking the life out of that blamed alarm clock that has been getting me up at daylight every morning for the past ten years."—Judge.

A newly elected squire in Wisconsin was much elated by his honors, but was not sure that he could carry them gracefully, says a writer in the New York Sun. So he haunted the courthouse to gather stray crumbs of wisdom from higher courts which sat there.

PRESIDENT FINLEY UNDER AN ARREST

Sensational Feature of Railway
Rate Litigation at Asheville Yesterday Morning.

PRITCHARD VS. POLICE COURT

Railway Magnate Was Immediately
Discharged on Habeas Corpus Proceedings—Sparred Between Officers and Railroad People.

(By Wire to The Morning Star.)

Asheville, N. C., July 27.—Sitting his action to the word of Governor Glenn, who yesterday announced that railroad officials "higher up" should be reached, Police Justice Reynolds, today issued warrants simultaneously for the arrest of President Finley, of the Southern Railway, and for Ticket Agent Wilson. Mr. Finley was arrested early in the forenoon, and was released on habeas corpus proceedings early in the afternoon, while the ticket agent, who was taken from his post of duty, thus compelling numerous passengers to board trains without tickets, was arraigned in the police court in the forenoon.

Attorneys for the Southern signified their willingness to proceed with Wilson's trial, but Judge Reynolds announced that the hearing would be postponed until Monday. Counsel declined to give bond hoping that the court would turn the prisoner over to an officer, and thus pave the way for habeas corpus proceedings, but Judge Reynolds checkmated this move by saying that he would take personal charge of the ticket agent. A few minutes later, however, it became apparent that Judge Reynolds simply meant that he would take charge of the prisoner "constructively," for he remarked that Mr. Wilson could "follow him around all day if he wanted to," and then walked off, leaving the agent to go his way unmolested, but feeling very uncertain about his legal status.

It was quite early, that Mr. Finley was apprised of his prospective arrest. A policeman went to Battery Park Hotel with the warrant but the hotel people refused to volunteer any information. The officer consumed some time in finding the railroad man. In the meanwhile the railway officials were playing for time and the officer was persuaded that it was his duty to read some important appearing documents handed to him before Mr. Finley should be rushed to the police station. In this way the machinery of the Federal court was set in action and things were running smoothly in this respect by the time President Finley had concluded his breakfast.

It was only a few moments after Mr. Finley had actually submitted to arrest that he made application for release, and then Judge Pritchard, in the United States Court, signed the writ which was served on the policeman while the party was on their way to the police court. Thus the course of the procession deflected from the police to the Federal Court. President Finley and all the officers were examined as witnesses during this habeas corpus hearing, and Judge Pritchard was apparently nettled when he discerned a disposition on the part of counsel for the State to show that he had issued the writ for the release of President Finley before the actual arrest of that gentleman.

"All right, go ahead and prove that," observed Judge Pritchard, as Mr. Finley was questioned, on this point by Judge J. H. Merrimon. It was the contention of Judge Merrimon that Mr. Finley was only technically under arrest, the policeman testified that he was under instructions to arrest Mr. Finley and take him at once to the police court, and as the warrant read that way, Judge Pritchard concluded that the executive head of the Southern was being deprived of his liberty and ordered his release.

The arrests of Finley and Wilson excited interest from the fact that the warrants were issued before Police Justice Reynolds who recently issued the warrants for the arrest of District Passenger Agent Wood and Ticket Agent Graham.

That time there was considerable talk of contempt proceedings should there be further interference with the jurisdiction of Judge Pritchard and Judge Reynolds was summoned to testify before Judge Pritchard relative to the charge that the indictments were framed up in a local newspaper office and that the prosecution's witnesses were not voluntary.

Now this phase of the question is again rendered doubly interesting from the fact that the witnesses whose names were affixed to the warrants issued today were not voluntary. The warrants for the arrest of President Finley was sworn to by a police officer before Judge Reynolds and City Attorney Bourne and Frank Carter, well known attorneys were named in the warrants as prosecuting witnesses, the warrants setting forth the fact that Messrs. Bourne and Carter bought tickets to Toxaway and paid therefor the old rate. Late today Mr. Carter made a statement to the effect that he was unaware that his name was being used in such connection and characterized as unfortunate the arrests of Mr. Finley.

After his release, Mr. Finley announced his intention to remain here for a while and he will ask for the postponement of a board meeting in Washington which he had agreed to attend Tuesday.

The statement of the clearing house banks for the week shows that the banks held $258,875 more than the legal reserve requirements. This is an increase of $170,600, as compared with last week.

SITUATION IN KOREA.

Guards Have Been Placed in Charge
More Rioting.

(By Wire to The Morning Star.)
Seoul, July 27.—Guards have been placed along the railways in the country today and regular bodies of troops are patrolling all parts of Seoul.

Korean troops and rioters in Kyong provinces have attacked the police destroying seven Japanese dwellings, injuring six persons and driving the Japanese to their boats.

Two of Marquis Ito's new appointees, the minister of the household and keeper of the seals, both in the cabinet, have been ordered to reform the court and warned that if this is not accomplished within three months, their appointments will be revoked. This means putting a quietus on the activity of the former emperor, who as late as July 23, it is said, intrigued to send a commissioner to Germany.

In a lengthy statement which will be published this morning in the Richmond Times-Dispatch, Governor Swanson characterizes the restraining order of Judge Pritchard in the two-cent rate ordered by the Corporation Commission of that State as outrageous. He says the fixing of the rate by the Corporation Commission is a legislative act yet he restrains this legislative body of Virginia from doing what is absolutely necessary to complete an act of legislation under the State constitution, viz: publishing the order in a newspaper of general circulation in Virginia. He says Pritchard virtually says: "I will restrain you from legislating until I have determined whether the act you propose is just and constitutional."

Be an American Patriot.

SENATOR PETTUS GATHERED HOME

Venerable Alabama Statesman Passed Away Last Night
at Hot Springs, N. C.

A STROKE OF APOPLEXY

Stricken Friday at Breakfast Table, Where He Was Spending the Summer—Remains Taken to Asheville—The Funeral.

(By Wire to The Morning Star.)

Asheville, N. C., July 27.—United States Senator Edmund W. Pettus, of Alabama, died tonight at 10 o'clock at Hot Springs, N. C., from the effects of a sun stroke or apoplexy, with which he was seized while at the breakfast table yesterday morning. His entire body was paralyzed and he never recovered consciousness since that time.

Senator Pettus' daughter and his grandson, E. W. Pettus, Jr., reached Hot Springs an hour before the Senator's death, but he did not recognize them. The attending physicians say that from the moment of the apoplectic stroke Senator Pettus suffered no pain, and that he passed away quietly. While the funeral arrangements have not been completed, it is announced that the body will be prepared for burial here and on Monday will be taken to Selma, Ala., for interment. The funeral services probably will be held in Selma Tuesday next or Wednesday. Senator Pettus arrived at Hot Springs about a week ago from Lake Springs, Tenn. Up to the time of the seizure he was apparently in the best of health. At the breakfast table yesterday, it is said, he was unusually cheerful, and when he was stricken the guests of the hotel thought he merely had a fainting fit. Physicians were summoned from Asheville for consultation with the local physicians, and on that occasion his unusual vigor was the subject of comment.

Senator Pettus celebrated his 86th birthday at Lake Springs last week, and on that occasion his unusual vigor was the subject of comment.

THE HAYWOOD CASE.

Fate of Prisoner Now in Hands of Jury at Boise, Idaho.

(By Wire to The Morning Star.)
Boise, Idaho, July 27.—The jury in the case of William D. Haywood, secretary-treasurer of the Western Federation of Miners, charged with the murder of former Governor Frank Steiwerberg, retired to consider its verdict at 11:04 A. M. today and Judge Wood immediately ordered a recess until 2 P. M. The reading of the judge's charge and instructions required just an hour, and at the end of that time the 12 jurymen filed from the room in custody of Sheriff Staff Hodgins and six bailiffs. As they left the jury box, Judge Wood said: "Gentlemen: I would suggest that you take your chair cushions with you."

Each juror acted upon the suggestion. The jury room in the court house had been prepared for their use. Haywood listened with characteristic stoicism to Judge Wood's lengthy charge and when the jury retired he went back to his cell with a confident smile about his lips. As he was about to leave his gray haired mother rushed up and kissed him. There was no other demonstration.

No one ventured an opinion as the jury retired as to the length of time that would be required in arriving at a verdict. The jury may report at any time of the night or day. The Idaho laws already provide that a jury may render its verdict in open court on Sunday.

Judge Wood in his charge gave the jury the choice of five verdicts, as follows:

Murder in the first degree, with a penalty of ten years to life imprisonment.

Voluntary manslaughter, one to ten years.

Involuntary manslaughter, with a penalty of one to ten years, and not guilty.

At 12:15 Judge Wood gave instructions to have the jury taken out to luncheon. At that time they had been deliberating for an hour and fourteen minutes, and as they left the jury room several of the twelve men were engaged in animated, but apparently good natured, discussion.

Judge Wood at 10 o'clock tonight, went to his home, leaving instructions to be called on the phone in case the jury should arrive at a verdict. This was not reached during the night.

THE WATER CARNIVAL.

New York Athletic Club Again Captured Prizes at Jamestown.

(By Wire to The Morning Star.)
Norfolk, July 27.—The New York Athletic Club captured all but two of today's events and won first place in points both in the senior and junior events of the Jamestown Exposition water carnival.

The senior championship for fancy diving was won by George Gaidzik of the Chicago Athletic Club. O'Callaghan of the New York Club who was the favorite finished second and with 182 points against 223 scored by his opponent.

By a magnificent spurt in the last ten yards Goodwin, of the New York Athletic Club, defeated Abbey of Princeton in the senior championship. Leehde of Chicago was the only other contestant to finish in this race.

Champion C. M. Daniels appeared only in the 440 yard senior race. He was last in the water, but arose to the surface with a good lead and held it to the finish.
